

I really like this tricky races, although sometimes the low winds make them a nightmare.

This time staying at the front pack after a difficult first night was very important, because once we reached the narrow strait the race was a matter of keep awake for as long as possible. BBQs were all around, and it became a war of attrition.

After getting the south side of the main island, big winds took us southeast very fast, where another tricky leg started and choosing the right path was difficult, resulting in important changes in the final ranking among the boats in top 10.
