

Well, a first win is always a first win and it was very exciting at the end!

For being a Saturday race I think it was an early start so I had set a start-dc the night before and I was then thinking of going east all the way. But by morning the wx had changed, and I didn't have the time to change my start direction so I started by going east of the island at the start but realised rather quickly that the west would be better so I tacked as soon as I could and then it was not much to do until the last tack.

After being away for 45 min and then found a forgotten dc had hit, so I had to change the course by 1.5 dgr and thought that that was it ! But it wasn't. I was first to the last rounding and then I knew I would win. It was fun to win, I must say :))

I like these race where you have an option on which way to go and I think that I was a little lucky with my choice of way, but that is what makes a winner
