

The majority of race from my perspective was quite straight forward. It was just a case of "banging the corners" and hoping to be in a position to challenge up the final beat. For the majority of the race it was the same few boats hovering around the top 5 or 6 and so when the final corner arrived I was relieved when my jump put me right on the corner.

Once the server had settled down and everyones boat had updated, it seemed I had got the best rounding putting me a small amount in front. I had been looking at which tack to go on and decided to head on starboard and only put the one tack in. Was quite relieved to see the majority of the fleet with the same idea. Only boat in contention that tacked was atlet.

Just one layline to hit and quite unusually for me I nailed it. Coming into the line I had an eye on atlet and it was looking close, but he had another tack to put in which allowed me to cross in 1st place.

The first win for me in many years.

Cheers and a merry Christmas

ybw_TREV / December 2014