

For the final race of the series, I came up with a complicated motivation. On the one hand, in the struggle for victory in the series, I did not participate because of the late entry into SYC. On the other hand I already had two medals (for the second and third places), so the collection is clearly missing something :)

I started a couple of days before the start to watch out for the weather Strategy for the race changed from the forecast of the forecast. It was a nightmare.

At the time of start I can only guess where to go, and uncertainty has added the expectation of a new forecast for the first quarter of the way to the mark. I tried to stay on the eastern periphery of the fleet and using more speed, go out to the turn in the lead.

In general, the plan worked.

Next quest: had to go through a weather front with minimal losses. It is possible to guess at a southern scenario. I also tried to stay so that I would be the first to go to the fresh wind.

A very interesting series of races for historic ships at bad predictable weather. A very interesting adventure.

Thanks SOL team! Thanks to all participants for the excellent company!

best regards, kenza
