

BA-Rio:

The basic strategy was to go way offshore, that was complicated by a front moving across the fleet. That resulted in erratic routing, and while I make a point of not totally overreacting to each and every update, overreact I did.

When it settled down I was 5 minutes behind knockando60, who must have sailed a much cleaner course.

I did try to find a passing lane, and got as much as 10nm separation at some point, but it never really worked out.

Congrats knockando for keeping his cool and dominating this one!
