

The corner of Brazil at Recife presents a strategic problem. Two things have to be balanced – the further offshore they sail, the stronger and steadier the breeze ought to be, but the more miles they have to travel. There's an old rule of thumb for this one – stay within 10 miles of the coast, or stand further off than 100 miles.