

OFU TO MAIA SPRINT 2022

As usual this kind of races have a so close finish that you never know if things are going well or not until the very last moment but this time it was worse, because the fleet spread in two groups, and all change dramatically in the very last minute.

Since race start I was in a very good windward position over my fellow skippers in the north side of the route, but it seemed that the south group had always a bit of advantage over us.

I got advantage of my situation and at the first tip on the north side of the island I managed to overtake everyone in the north, in a very close fight with our southafrican mate Patrick. The next rounding tip was good again, and when we headed towards the finish line the only question still unanswered was if we could overtake the southers guys, who were ahead and closer to line, although with a much worse angle.

Minutes passed and things seemed to stay better for them, but at the last minute all changed, and all the guys at the front pack of the north route overtook those in the south and I got a long expected victory.
