

Transat à Deux 2025 - REPORT

Hello everyone, my name is Serge Tanguy, and I'm from Saint-Appolinard (in the foothills of the Pilat Natural Park south of Lyon, ed.) in France.

I discovered Sailonline a little over six months ago. It was a bit difficult to get started, but the more you play, the more you get hooked on this exciting game (simulation, ed.).

I wanted to participate in this transatlantic race with this small boat, the Figaro, which was still reasonably priced.

Not much to say about the descent to the Canaries. I managed to run aground on La Palma by tacking a little too close to the south of the island. I need to improve my understanding of SOL's iterations.

As for the Atlantic crossing, I regularly followed my QtVlm router, which slowly made its way to Saint Barthélemy.

I sailed for several years in the northern Caribbean, and from experience, I knew that at this time of year the winds are northeasterly. For this reason, I forced my routing onto a much more southerly route. The option paid off, even though I had my doubts until the last weather update.

I'm very happy with this first victory.
